The Good Dads Chapter in Chillicothe, MO, honored seven fathers this week at its formal graduation ceremony. Through hard work, dedication and support from others, these fathers met all requirements of the six-month New Pathways for Good Dads program—including completing both Good Dads classes, attaining stable employment, contributing to open child support cases, and contributing to the wellbeing of their families to the extent that they are able.

This remarkable achievement would not be possible without class facilitators and mentors JB Togun and Cameron Schmitz, and members of the Good Dads Chillicothe advisory board. Good Dads is also grateful for Abba House, a Christian discipleship nonprofit resourcing men in recovery. While Good Dads is not a religious nonprofit, it occasionally collaborates with faith communities who generously offer classroom space and program referrals.

Founded in 2015 in Springfield, MO, Good Dads now serves thousands of fathers in more than 20 communities across the state. The nonprofit aims to build better communities by inspiring, resourcing and encouraging all fathers to be more involved in the lives of their children.
